17.00 SESSION 1

Opening session.

Anne-Grete Ström-Erichsen, Minister of Health and Care Services, Norway.

17.30 SESSION 2

Basic concepts I

Chair: Stein Husebø, Director, Dignity Center – Care for the Old, Norway. Conference Chairman

a. Human rights

Keynote Speaker: Begona Roman, Philosophy Professor, Universitet de Barcelona, Spain.

Worldwide millions of people are living in conditions, which threaten their lives, their rights and their dignity. 'Ageism' may become the new threat to human rights. What are the underlying values of the concept human rights? Are these values endangered in ageing societies?

b. What constitutes good care?

Keynote Speaker: Anne-Sophie Parent, Director of AGE, the European Older People's Platform, Belgium.

In ageing policies, and also in Human Rights, much emphasis is placed on the participation, security and pensions of older people. These are important conditions for the social integration of older people, promoting health and avoiding dependency. What is the policy when older people become dependent and in need of care? How are dignity, autonomy and self-respect safe guarded in such situations?

18.30 SESSION 3

Basic concepts II.

Chair: Signe Hananger, Administrative leader of the division of health and social services in The Norwegian Union of Municipal and General Employees, member of the International Conference Committee.

a. Transition into an ageing society

Keynote Speaker: Wim van den Heuvel, Professor in Care Sciences at the University of Groningen, The Netherlands, emeritus professor in medical sociology and rehab/handicap, member of the International Conference Committee.

The transition into a 'mature' society is rarely analysed from an historic demographic perspective. Are older people non productive citizens? Is it really true that we cannot afford care for the old in the future?

b. Dignity: its meaning and need

Keynote Speaker: Harvey Max Chochinov, Professor of psychiatry at the University of Manitoba, and director of the Manitoba palliative care research Unit at CancerCare Manitoba, Canada.

Dignity signifies that a (human) being has an innate right to respect and ethical treatment. To realize dignity is not that easy, especially in the care of dependent persons. It supposes professionals as well as laypersons who have the competencies to deliver dignified care, a structure/organization, which enables care giving with dignity, and a society, which considers dignified care as a moral duty. What are the roles of the frail older people, their families and professionals in such processes? Do health care professionals have the qualities and competencies to support these processes?

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 3.

INTRODUCTION: PROBLEMS AND POSSIBILITIES

Chair: Stein Husebø, Director, Dignity Center – Care for the Old, Norway. Conference Chairman.

08.45 SESSION 4

Good care: Criteria, quality, competence, attainability?

Chair: Marinela Olaroiu van den Heuvel, Geriatrician at RIAGG Maastricht, the Netherlands / Romania, member of the International Conference Committee.

Keynote Speaker: Alexandre Kalache, PhD, Senior Advisor to the US President on Global Ageing at The New York Academy of Medicine (NYAM).

Discussant: Wolfgang Wodarg, former Chair of the Health Committee at the Council of Europe, former SPD Member of the German Parliament.

The answers to questions like ‘what is good care?’ and ‘What level of care is needed?’ are not universal. Different perspectives have to be considered. Within these various contexts the central question is: how are we going to realise this care to ensure quality and accountability? How do we support families who take care of frail relatives? Which qualities do care professionals need when looking at the specific problems of frail older people? What new knowledge do we need to ‘create a mature society’?

The dying old, death as a fact of life

Chair: Iva Holmerova, Director and consultant Geriatrician, Centre of Gerontology, Prague. President Czech Society of Gerontology and Geriatrics, member of the International Conference Committee.

Keynote Speakers: Bettina Husebø, PhD, Clinical Director at the Bergen Red Cross Nursing Home, Postdoctoral Fellow, University of Bergen, Norway – member of the International Conference Committee.
Sheila Payne, Director of the International Observatory on End of Life at Lancaster University, UK, vice president of EAPC, the European Association for Palliative Care.

Meeting severe ill and dying elderly patients – Spirituality and mind.

Keynote Speaker: Enric Benito, Hospital Joan March, Mallorca, Senior Consultant in Palliative Care and Spiritually Group Coordinator (SECPAL), Spain.

Discussant: Andreas Heller, Professor Dr. in Palliative Care and Ethics, IFF University of Klagenfurt, Vienna, Austria.

The dying person may perceive her/himself as a burden, if the process of dying is denied as a natural part of life. Does accepting dying as a part of life also mean that taking your own life has to be acceptable if it is based on free will and an autonomous decision? Perhaps, frail older people experience a lack of qualified care due to changes in health care policies and health care arrangements. Can scandals about ‘inhumane care’ in turn be ‘structural’? Is there a choice for the frail older person?

The role and interactions of caregivers

Chair: Johann Baumgartner, Styrian Hospital Association, Graz, Leader of KAGes-Services / Koordination Palliativbetreuung Steiermark, Austria, member of the International Conference Committee.

Keynote Speaker: Robin Youngson, Clinical Director at Waitake Hospital,

Auckland, New Zealand.

Discussant: Win Tadd, Reader Cesagen, School of Social Sciences, Cardiff University, UK, Chair Welsh Assembly Government National Dignity in Care Group, member of the International Conference Committee.

Taking care of frail older people is a pleasure and a burden, a privilege and a duty. Caregivers maybe family members, volunteers or professionals who each influence each other. What circumstances make caregivers lose or gain motivation, satisfaction, meaning and compassion? How may volunteers keep their important role in societies? And when are interactions between the 'parties' successful?

Decision making in care for frail older people

Chair: Sverre Chr. Wilhelmsen, Public Relations Manager, Dignity Center
– Care for the Old, Norway, member of the International Conference Committee.

Keynote Speaker: Stein Husebø, Director, Dignity Center – Care for the Old, Norway. Conference Chairman.

Discussant: Thomas Klie, Prof.dr.jur, Protestant College Freiburg, Germany.

Patients have the right to participate in decisions about their care, e.g., diagnostic and treatment interventions, diet, ambulation, daily care, and end-of-life care. Consent to (or refusal of) diagnostic and treatment interventions requires that the person demonstrate their ability to consider the benefits, burdens and risks of their decision. Informed consent and agreement on treatment requires competence in decision making, which has clinical, ethical and legal aspects. How can frail older people participate in end of life decisions in cooperation with health care professionals and families?

Closing session: Dignity for the frail old in a mature society

Chair: Stein Husebø, Director, Dignity Center – Care for the Old, Norway. Conference Chairman.

Keynote Speaker: Bengt Westerberg, President of the Swedish Red Cross, former Swedish Minister for Social Affairs.

Participation of older people is essential for the older people themselves, but also for society as a whole. The ageing of the population needs a change in society, a new society. However, looking at the current debates, such as those concerning participation being necessary for financial-economic reasons and whether dying viewed as part of life are rather negative developments which endanger the position of the elderly in society. Ageing is apparently a burden, not a blessing. It means firm policy measures are needed to realize dignified care at national and European levels
